

IDC Luncheon Forum this time hosted Dr. Clement Price. He analyzed Obama's election, including its possible future impacts.

Home-made Turkish food was served before the lecture and Q&A followed the speeches. IDC Luncheons are open to public and free of charge.

Theme: Future impacts of Obama's election

Date: Tuesday, Dec. 16, 2008

Venue: IDC Newark Office

Speaker: Dr. Clement Price

Dr. Clement Price was recently tapped by Obama officials to help choose the next director of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Read about his role on Obama's transition team on Star Ledger

Clement Alexander Price is Professor of History and Director of the Rutgers Institute on Ethnicity, Culture, and the Modern Experience at Rutgers University, Newark Campus.

A native of Washington, D.C., Dr. Price teaches courses that span American history, including the Development of the United States, Afro-American History, Civil War and Reconstruction, Intellectual History of Afro-America, Topics in the History of Newark, New Jersey, United States Urban History, History of the Civil Rights Movement, Memory and History, Senior Seminar in History, The Black Experience in Western Civilization, Paul Robeson and 20th Century Black Modernism, and Modern America. His courses draw upon current historiographical issues and debates and they encourage students to consider the past from several perspectives and the future of the past in public discourse. Read more about Dr. Clement Price